

'I identify as a queer femme of mixed (or multiple) heritage, a Londoner, and a female. It's important that I'm able to be myself at work and be able to express my identity because I work with vulnerable people. Some have suffered traumas because of their identities. I think if they see staff being able to be and express themselves, it will help our clients to feel safer in our services. Then they too can begin to express themselves in the ways they need to.'
